Blames the Autoboats and Wishes That They Were Automobiles, So that the Swordfish Could Puncture Their Tires.

After sleeping for one solid week the state who has been puzzling the Aquarium by his slumberfest opened his eyes and stretched himself to-day, apparently greatly refreshed by his nap. This skate was fished up off Seabright. N. J., and sent to the Aquarium recently.

The skate seemed to have been tray-peared weaker than the weakest weak-peared weaker than the weakest weak-line of the suffering endured by the fish in waters off New York and New Jersey. "Why this deep sea Rip Van Winkle with good old Schneider, the dogfish? It's all on account of those pesky motor-boats. They kept us all awake, so that we couldn't sleep, and I haven't had a solid sleep until this summer. It began early in the season, when they ran their gasoline runabouts over the water of the outer harbor and Gravesend Bay and up around seabright. "The snoosing used to be fine up off Seabright, N. J., until the chug-thugs were massaging the water all night long as well as all day. Aqua estate went right down in those parts immediately. The sea horses shied at the autos and bolted for quieter waters.

The fins of the other fish in his case were muffled so that they wouldn't bother the sleeping skate, and although he breathed through his gills he seemed to be very comfortable. The mosquitoes didn't bother him, and the children were hushed up when they attempted to play, and were hurried off to the schools.

Not a Dull Skate. But to-day the skate woke up and tretched himself and yawned. He was

"YORK STATE FOLKS" CORDIALLY WELCOMED.

James Lackaye Was So "Nat'r'l" that the Audience Expected Him to Die on Its Hands.

Except for a painfully intense lover chap, the piece was well acted. A rail-have been on land, and merry new school fishermen who go fishing in autoboats, and I suppose if they could after a land I suppose if they could a land been automobiles the swordish could have punctured their tires, but they were never tired, though. And we were all losing weight. You could tell that by looking at the scales. That's why I have been trying to get SI7 worth of sleep since putting up a this hotel. The only thing I miss is the bell buoy."

Boy's Arm Mangled by Fall from

"York State Folks," which reopened the Majestic Theatre on Saturday night, is an amusing and appealing play by Arthur Sidman. It has been trying for years to get to "the big city," and now that it is here promises to enjoy a good long stay. It was certainly given a cordial welcome.

road runs through the play, and if it had run through James Lackaye, who played a non-progressive, stubborn old a very nice, long-skirted tole. By sheer homeliness and a limping-cracker-steal-ing indlyiduality, Arthur Gregory made the small part of Ziby Tucker stand out like a circus poster on the stand out like a circus poster on the side weather-beaten barn.

always worth more than the price.
Our mission is to give you value—to sell the best possible supplies at the smallest possible price. Does it pay? Yes; our customers benefit in health, comfort and pocket; our business has grown from one modest store, 23 years ago, until we now have 160 GROCERIES. All are in and about Greater New York—a few suburban, but all metropolitan.

We aim to raise every customer to the level of true economy. Our system is now so perfected and our stores so located that we can supply a million families with better eatables and drinkables for less money than they can be procured from any other source. Why not try us? One of our stores is handy to your home. You will have better food and more money. These prices show some of the savings you can make up to next Wednesday night, viz .:-
